Research Profile

Ph.D. student in the joint doctoral programme Resources for the New Public Administration at the University of Milano-Bicocca and the University of Padova (Italy). Her research interests include public policy analysis and evaluation, local and regional development, collaborative governance, and democratic processes. Her current research focuses on collaborative governance in local development policies, examining how these approaches influence both the capacity of local administrations and the dynamics of cooperation among actors involved in territorial development processes. I have experience in European policy evaluation, including programmes such as AMIF, Legalità, and ERDF Liguria, as well as in providing technical assistance to Managing Authorities of Regional Programmes financed by European Funds, including ERDF and ESF+. My methodological expertise combines qualitative research and text analysis with econometric methods. Her methodological expertise combines qualitative research methods and text analysis with econometric approaches to analyse institutional dynamics and policy implementation processes.
